Here on lot No. 67 on the north side of Church Street, stands one of Smithfield's handsomest historical homes known as the King-Atkinson House

This lot was first sold by Arthur Smith to James Arthur, merchant, in 1752, and there is no further mention of No. 67 until 1814 when the records show it was then owned and occupied by Thomas Purdie whose wife, Sally, had inherited lots No. 66, 67, and 68 from her father, Thomas King.

Thomas King had bought No. 66 from Mills Wills in 1762 and the transaction must have included all three of these lots. King served as an ensign in the Revolutionary War prior to 1777 when he resigned his commission. His wife was Sally, daughter of Robert Tynes, of a family long established in Isle of Wight, and from which Tynes corner near Smithfield derives its name.

In the census of 1782 Thomas King owned much property, in both town and county and was a Justice of the county court for many years. In 1798 it was ordered by the Court "th...
